

Model Reduction for Transport Dominated Problems

Wolfgang Dahmen, RWTH Aachen

In this talk model reduction strategies are presented that arise from studying compressible flows over rough surfaces. Central issues concern geometric upscaling and associated cell problems in the form of parameter dependent convection diffusion problems and their treatment by reduced basis methods. The main conceptual ingredients centering around certain stable variational formulations, greedy space growth techniques, and appropriate optimality benchmarks are highlighted.